Dear Fieldguide hiring team,

Fieldguide's Executive Assistant role stood out because it treats support as operating leverage for Sales and Customer Success, not administration in isolation. Keeping two leaders focused while customer needs, internal priorities, and cross-functional work move quickly is high-trust work. It is also work I genuinely want to do.

I want to address my path directly. My titles have been in account management, experience and product leadership, and AI implementation rather than Executive Assistant. This is not a fallback or a role I consider beneath me. I am intentionally moving toward a hands-on support position where judgment, organization, anticipation, and follow-through are the work product.

For more than seven years, I managed Fortune 500 pharma and healthcare relationships across $2M-$50M+ programs. I translated changing client and leadership priorities into briefs, presentation materials, production requirements, timelines, and coordinated next steps across account, strategy, creative, UX, development, and regulated review teams. That work taught me to prepare people well, notice what is missing, communicate clearly across levels, and keep important work moving without adding noise.

At Kinesso, I helped scale product design from 2 to 30 people across the US and Poland while supporting enterprise analytics used by 7,000+ users across 22 brands. I also created a research operating model across more than 20 products using advance context, structured sessions, standardized reports, status communication, and follow-up. Those experiences required the same discipline Fieldguide needs around competing priorities, stakeholder care, meeting readiness, documentation, and dependable execution.

My current AI work adds another useful layer. At Hedgehox and One Block Away, I turn incomplete requests into clear briefs, scoped workflows, decision-ready demonstrations, and reliable next steps. I have built AI-enabled tools for intake, scoping, review routing, submission capture, and audit-ready review. I would bring that same mindset to leader preparation, recurring coordination, action tracking, and the thoughtful automation of repetitive EA work.

I will not pretend to have held a formal EA title or claim calendar and travel ownership that is not in my background. What I would bring from day one is mature stakeholder judgment, discretion, clear communication, comfort with detail, rapid learning, and a real willingness to own the work that keeps two GTM leaders effective. Fieldguide's focus on trust, ownership, speed, and win-win relationships makes that contribution especially meaningful to me.

I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my client-service background, operational discipline, and AI workflow experience could support Fieldguide's VP Sales and VP Customer Success.
