Dear SafeRide Health hiring team,

I am applying for the Strategic Account Manager role because I am looking to make a return to account management, and SafeRide is solving a problem that matters: helping people get to the care they need. This role would let me do what I know well - build trust with healthcare clients, make performance information useful, and keep internal teams aligned around a plan they can deliver.

For more than seven years, I managed Fortune 500 pharma and healthcare clients with $2M-$50M+ budgets. As one of two consumer account leads on FCB Health's largest pharma account, I worked across brand planning, integrated campaigns, production, and MLR review. I translated client priorities into briefs, feedback, requirements, timelines, and review-ready deliverables across account, creative, UX, and development teams. That work required steady communication, careful follow-through, and clear decisions when priorities changed.

Product and analytics roles have since changed how I support an account. At Kinesso, I built a Digital Experience Audit workflow that turned channel scoring, benchmarks, recommendations, and visualization into presentation-ready client outputs. I also led work on enterprise analytics used by more than 7,000 people across 22 brands. At Hedgehox, I now turn pharma agency needs into tools for scoping, review routing, claim review, submission capture, and FDA signal monitoring. Together, that experience helps me look past an immediate request and understand the data, workflow, and implementation details behind it.

My healthcare account background comes from pharma and agency delivery rather than payer transportation. I would come in ready to learn the operating details of non-emergency medical transportation. What transfers is the daily work: listening closely, spotting issues early, bringing the right people into the conversation, and turning client needs and performance data into clear next steps.

I would welcome the chance to discuss how my healthcare account experience, analytics background, and implementation work could help SafeRide strengthen client relationships and improve access to care.
