Dear FINN Partners hiring team,

I am applying for the Senior Project Manager role because it sits in the part of agency work where I have always been strongest: turning a moving set of client needs, budgets, feedback, dependencies, and deadlines into a clear path for the team.

For more than seven years, I managed Fortune 500 pharma and healthcare accounts with $2M-$50M+ budgets. As one of two consumer account leads on FCB Health's largest pharma account, I worked across TV, radio, digital, gaming, Times Square, unbranded campaigns, brand planning, and regulated review. I translated client priorities into briefs, production requirements, timelines, creative feedback, and MLR-ready deliverables while coordinating account, strategy, creative, production, UX, development, senior leadership, and clients. The title was account management, but the daily work required the same discipline FINN is hiring for: setting expectations, keeping details visible, navigating changes, surfacing risk early, and moving complex work toward approval.

That operating focus continued as my roles moved into experience and product leadership. At Kinesso, I helped scale product design from 2 to 30 people across the United States and Poland while supporting enterprise analytics used by 7,000+ users across 22 white-label brands. Leading at that scale meant giving teams clear standards, listening closely, resolving ambiguity, and protecting quality without creating unnecessary process.

My recent work has brought me even closer to the systems behind agency delivery. At Hedgebox, I built Scope Generator for finance and operations teams to manage rate cards, brands, deliverables, timelines, role-level resourcing, and cost breakdowns. I also designed BriefFlow around structured intake, missing-information flags, comments, approvals, sign-off, export, and project-management integration paths. Those tools came from seeing where work slows down and designing a cleaner way for people to move it forward.

My project-system experience comes from structured agency workflows and building tools like Scope Generator and BriefFlow. I cannot document direct use of Kantata or Workfront, but I can bring hands-on experience with the scoping, schedules, budgets, routing, approvals, and finalization those platforms support. I learn tools quickly and would be ready to ramp on FINN's platform and policies.

FINN is looking for someone dependable enough to own the details, confident enough to address issues, and personable enough to keep clients and teams working well together. That combination has been central to my career. I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how my agency delivery background, workflow-system experience, and cross-functional leadership could help FINN's projects stay clear, healthy, and moving.
